

The Haunt Industry is reaching out to you...

Seattlehaunts would like to invite area schools for a behind the scenes tour for our younger friends to enjoy.

This lights-on event is designed to give the students insight to the many different trade and performance disciplines that are drawn on to create today's high value haunt productions.

Black Collar Jobs Trades and Labor

The Haunt Industry draws heavily from the skilled trade professions during the building season. Not only does the attraction have to be physically built and maintained; but may have industrial grade electrical needs; air and hydraulic systems powering props that need to be installed and maintained; and ample opportunities to fabricate and weld everything from prop frames to full sized optical illusions such as our 'black hole'!

Shadow Players Performance Disciplines

The most publicly visible Haunt Attraction workers are the actors. This seasonal position represents the monsters that the public will be interacting with. Each character is the end result of hours of intensive work and planning by make-up and special effects artists, costume designers, and house management. Equally important is the support from behind the scenes; lighting and sound engineers, a strong business team, cooperative staff and dedicated marketing professionals.

The Haunted Attraction Industry is one of the fastest growing local level entertainment industries and generates roughly half a billion dollars annually in ticket sales across the United States. Take our exciting and educational tour to understand why.
